Oahu

City Lights, Surf Delights, and the Aloha Spirit

Discover the heart of Hawaii on the captivating island of Oahu. Oahu has it all. It is home to Waikiki Beach, Diamond Head, Pearl Harbor, and its north shore is famous for its surf and surf culture. The views from the top of Diamond Head as you can see above are worth the climb! When we visit Hawaii we almost always stop on Oahu for several days to get used to the timezone and take in some of that aloha spirit before venturing to one of the other islands. Check out our blog and video for more details and a suggested one week itinerary.

Maui

Resilience and Radiance

Maui is known as the valley isle because it is made up of two volcanoes with a valley between them. Our hearts are with the resilient community of Lahaina as they face the devastating impact of the fires, and while the scars are visible, so is the indomitable spirit of its people. Our Maui blog and itinerary and video were completed just before the fires. So, visiting Lahaina will certainly be a different experience this year than it was last. We honor Lahaina's resilience and celebrate the strength of a community that rises, phoenix-like, from the ashes. There are many things to see on Maui including the awe-inspiring volcanic crater known as Haleakalā, which translates to "House of the Sun" in Hawaiian. Haleakalā is a dormant shield volcano that forms more than 75% of the entire island. Standing at an impressive 10,023 feet (3,055 meters) above sea level, the summit offers a surreal landscape that seems almost lunar. Visitors often wake up early to witness the breathtaking sunrise from the summit, where the first rays of sunlight paint the crater in hues of red and orange. It is an experience you won't forget.
